

S T R

STRESS. n. f. [Fræce, Saxon, violence; or from disstress.]
1. Importance; important part.
A body may as well lay too little as too much stress upon a dream; but the less we heed them the better. L'Estrange.
The stress of the fable lies upon the hazard of having a numerous stock of children. L'Estrange.
This, on which the great stress of the business depends, would have been made out with reasons sufficient. Locke.
Consider how great a stress he laid upon this duty, while upon earth, and how earnestly he recommended it. Atterbury.
2. Violence; force, either acting or suffered.
By stress of weather driv'n,
At last they landed. Dryden's Æn.
Though the faculties of the mind are improved by exercise, yet they must not be put to a stress beyond their strength. Locke.
TO STRESS. v. a. [Evidently from disstress.] To distress; to put to hardships or difficulties.
Stirred with pity of the stressed plight
Of this sad realm. Fairy Queen.
TO STRETCH. v. a. [Fræcan, Saxon; strecken, Dutch.]
1. To extend; to spread out to a distance.
The stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land. Is. viii. 8.
Take thy rod, and stretch out thine hand. Ex. vii. 19.
2. To elongate, or strain to a greater space.
3. To expand; to display.
Leviathan on the deep,
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps. Milton.
What more likely to stretch forth the heavens, and lay the foundation of the earth, than infinite power?
4. To strain to the utmost.
This kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air. Shak. K. Lear.
5. To make tense.
So the stretch'd cord the skak'd dancer tries. Smith.
6. To carry by violence farther than is right: as, to stretch a text.
TO STRETCH. v. n.
1. To be extended.
Idolatry is a horrible sin, yet doth repentance stretch unto it. Whitgift.
A third is like the former: a fourth? start eye!
What! will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom? Shak.
This to rich Ophir's rising morn is known,
And stretch'd out far to the burnt swarthy zone. Cowley.
Your dungeon stretching far and wide beneath. Milton.
2. To bear extension without rupture.
The inner membrane, that involved the liquors of the egg, because it would stretch and yield, remained unbroken. Boyle.
3. To fall beyond the truth.
What an allay do we find to the credit of the most probable event, that is reported by one who uses to stretch? Gou. Tongue.
STRETCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Extension; reach; occupation of more space.
At all her stretch her little wings the spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead:
Then flickering to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss. Dryden's Ceyx and Alcyon.
Disruption, as strong as they are, the bones would be in some danger of, upon a great and sudden stretch or contortion, if they were dry. Ray on the Creation.
2. Force of body extended.
He thought to swim the stormy main,
By stretch of arms the distant shore to gain. Dryden's Æn.
3. Effort; struggle: from the act of running.
Those put a lawful authority upon the stretch to the abuse of power, under the colour of prerogative. L'Estrange.
Upon this alarm we made incredible stretches towards the South, to gain the fastnesses of Preston. Addison.
4. Utmost extent of meaning.
Quotations, in their utmost stretch, can signify no more than that Luther lay under severe agonies of mind. Atterbury.
5. Utmost reach of power.
This is the utmost stretch that nature can,
And all beyond is fullness, false, and vain. Granville.
STRETCHER. n. f. [from stretch.]
1. Any thing used for extension.
Tooth in the stretching course two inches with the stretcher only. Moxon.
2. The timber against which the rower plants his feet.
This fiery speech inflames his fearful friends,
They tug at ev'ry oar, and ev'ry stretcher bends. Dryden.
TO STREW. v. a. [The orthography of this word is doubtful: it is generally written strew, and I have followed custom; but Skinner likewise proposes strow, and Junius writes strow. Their reasons will appear in the word from which it may be derived. Strawan, Gothick; strowen, Dutch; strepian, Sax. strowen, German; strier, Danish. Perhaps strow is best, being that which reconciles etymology with pronunciation.]
1. To spread by being scattered.
The snow which does the top of Pindus strew,
Did never whiter shew. Spenser.

S T R

Is thine alone the feed that strews the plain?
The birds of heav'n shall vindicate their grain. Pope.
2. To spread by scattering.
I thought thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet maid,
And not have strew'd thy grave. Shakel. Hamlet.
Here be tears of perfect moan,
Wept for thee in Helicon;
And some flowers and some bays,
For thy herse, to strew the ways. Milton.
3. To scatter loosely.
The calf he burnt in the fire, ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made Israel drink of it. Ex.
With furies and nocturnal orgies strew'd,
Whom ev'n the savage beasts had spar'd, they kill'd,
And strew'd his mangled limbs about the field. Dryden.
STREWMENT. n. f. [from strew.] Any thing scattered in decoration.
Her death was doubtful.—For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her;
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin chaste,
Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial. Shakel. Hamlet.
STRIFE. n. f. [Latin.] In natural history, the small channels in the shells of cockles and scallops.
The salt, leisurely permitted to floor of itself in the liquor, exposed to the open air, did shoot into more fair crystalline strife, than those that were gained out of the remaining part of the same liquor by a more hasty evaporation.
STRIFE. adj. [from strive, Latin; stris, French.] Formed in strife.
These effluvia fly by strifed atoms and winding particles, as Des Cartes conceiveth, or glide by streams attracted from either pole unto the equator. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Des Cartes imagines this earth once to have been a sun, and so the centre of a lesser vortex, whose axis still kept the same posture, by reason of the strife particles finding no fit pores for their passages, but only in this direction. Roy.
Crystals, when incorporated with the fibrous tales, shews, if broke, a strifed or fibrous texture, like those tales. Woodward.
STRIFATURE. n. f. [from strive; strivure, Fr.] Disposition of strife.
Parts of tuberosus hematite shew several varieties in the crusts, strifature, and texture of the body. Woodward.
STRICK. n. f. [Fræy; strix, Latin.] A bird of bad omen.
The ill fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger,
The hoarse night-raven, trumpet of doleful drear,
The leather-winged bat, day's enemy,
The rueful strick, still waiting on the bier. Fairy Queen.
STRICKEN. The ancient participle of strike.
The cunningest mariners were so conquered by the storm, as they thought it best with stricken sails to yield to be governed by it. Sidney.
That shall I shew, as sure as hound
The stricken deer doth challenge by the bleeding wound. F. & G.
Abraham and Sarah were old, and well stricken in age. Gou.
With blindness were these stricken. Wish. xix. 17.
Parker and Vaughan, having had a controversy touching certain arms, were appointed to run some courses, when Parker was stricken into the mouth at the first course. Bacon.
Though the earl of Ulster was of greater power than any other subject in Ireland, yet was he so far stricken in years, as that he was unable to manage the martial affairs. Drin.
STRICKLE, or Strickles, or Strickel. n. f. That which strikes the corn to level it with the bushel. Amfworth.
STRICT. adj. [Fræctus, Latin.]
1. Exact; accurate; rigorously nice.
Thou'lt fall into deception unaware,
Not keeping strictest watch. Milton.
As legions in the field their front display,
To try the fortune of some doubtful day,
And move to meet their foes with sober pace,
Strick to their figure, though in wider space. Dryden.
He checks the bold design;
And rules as strict his labour'd works confine,
As if the Stagyrite o'erlook'd each line. Pope.
2. Severe; rigorous; not mild; not indulgent.
Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deputy. Shakel. Measure for Measure.
They will
By nature free, not over-ru'd by fate Milton.
Inextricable, or strict necessity.
If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable; and if, as they grow up, the rigour be, as they deserve it, gently relaxed, former restraints will increase their love. Locke.
Numa the rites of strict religion knew;
On ev'ry altar laid the incense due. Prior.
3. Confined; not extensive.
As they took the compass of their commission strict or larger, so their dealings were more or less moderate. Hobbes.
4. Close; tight.
The god, with speedy pace,
Just thought to strain her in a strict embrace. Dryden.

S T R

The fatal noose performed its office, and with most strict ligature squeezed the blood into his face. Arbutnot.
5. Tense; not relaxed.
We feel our fibres grow strict or lax according to the state of the air. Arbutnot.
STRICELY. adv. [from strict.]
1. Exactly; with rigorous accuracy.
The other parts being grosser, composed not only water, strictly so called, but the whole mass of liquid bodies. Burnet.
Charge him strictly
Not to proceed, but wait my farther pleasure. Dryden.
2. Rigorously; severely; without remission or indulgence.
In the discharge of thy place, set before thee the best examples; and after a time set before thee thine own, and examine thyself strictly whether thou didst not best at first. Bacon.
God may with the greatest justice strictly require endeavours from us, and without any inconsistency with his goodness inflict penalties on those who are wanting. Rogers's Sermons.
A weak prince again disposed the people to new attempts, which it was the clergy's duty to endeavour to prevent, if some of them had not proceeded upon a topic that, strictly followed, would enslave all mankind. Swift.
3. Closely; with tenderness.
STRICNESS. n. f. [from strict.]
1. Exactness; rigorous accuracy; nice regularity.
I could not grant too much or distrust too little to men, that pretended singular piety and religious strictness. K. Charles.
Such of them as cannot be concealed connive at, though in the strictness of your judgment you cannot pardon. Dryden.
Who were made privy to the secrets of heaven, but such as performed his revealed will at an higher rate of strictness than the rest? South.
Though in strictness our Saviour might have pleaded exemption from the Jewish tribute, he exerted his divine power in a miracle to pay it. Rogers.
2. Severity; rigour.
These commissioners proceeded with such strictness and severity as did much obscure the king's mercy. Bacon's Hen. VII.
3. Closeness; tightness; not laxity.
STRUCTURE. n. f. [from structura, Latin, a spark.]
1. A stroke; a touch.
The God of nature implanted in their vegetable natures certain passive structures, or signatures of that wisdom which hath made and ordered all things with the highest reason. Hale.
2. Contraction; closure by contraction.
As long as there is thirst, with a free passage by urine, and structure of the vessels, so long is water safely taken. Arbutnot.
3. A tight touch upon a subject; not a set discourse.
STRIDE. n. f. [Fræbes, Saxon.] A long step; a step taken with great violence; a wide divarication of the legs.
I'll speak between the change of man and boy,
With a reed voice, and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride. Shakel. Merchant of Venice.
The monster moved on with horrid strides. Milton.
Her voice theatrically loud,
And masculine her stride. Swift.
TO STRIDE. v. n. preter. I stride or strid; part. pass. stridden. [from the noun.]
1. To walk with long steps.
Mars in the middle of the shining shield
Is grav'd, and strides along the liquid field. Dryden.
To Jove, or to thy father Neptune, pray,
The brethren cry'd, and instant stride away. Pope.
2. To stand with the legs far from each other.
TO STRIDE. v. a. To pass by a step.
See him stride
Vallies wide. Arbutnot.
STRIDULOUS. adj. [Frædulus, Latin.] Making a small noise.
It arises from a small and stridulous noise, which, being firmly rooted, maketh a divulsion of parts. Brown.
STRIFE. n. f. [from strive.]
1. Contention; contest; discord.
I and my people were at great strife with the children of Ammon. Judg. xii. 2.
Some preach Christ even of envy and strife, and some of good-will. Phil. i. 15.
He is proud, knowing nothing; but doating about questions and strife of words. 1 Tim. vi. 4.
These vows, thus granted, rais'd a strife above
Betwixt the god of war and queen of love:
She granting first, had right of time to plead;
But he had granted too, and would recede. Dryden.
2. Opposition of nature or appearance; contrariety; contrast.
Artificial strife
Lives in those touches, livelier than life. Shakespeare.
How passion's well accorded strife
Makes all the harmony of life. Johnson.
STRIFEFUL. adj. [Fræful and full.] Contentious; discordant.
Th' ape was *strife*ful and ambitious,
And the fox guileful and most covetous. Hubbard's Tale.
I know not what new creation may creep forth from the *strife*ful heap of things, into which, as into a second chaos, we are fallen. Dr. Maine.

S T R

STRIGMENT. n. f. [Frægmentum, from stringo, Lat. to scrape.] Scraping; recement.
Many, besides the strigments and sudorous adhesions from mens hands, acknowledge that nothing proceedeth from gold in its usual decoction. Brown's Vulgar Err. ur.
TO STRIKE. v. a. preter. I struck or strook; part. pass. struck, strucken, stricken. [Fræcien, Saxon; streich, n, German; ad-strykia, Islandick; striker, Danish.]
1. To act upon by a blow; to hit with a blow.
He at Philippi kept
His sword e'en like a dancer, while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius. Shakel. Ant. and Cleopatra.
We will deliver you the cause,
Why I, that did love Cæsar when I struck him,
Proceeded thus. Shakel. Julius Cæsar.
I must
But wait his fall, whom I myself struck down. Shak. Macb.
2. To dash; to throw by a quick motion.
The blood strike on the two side-posts. Ex. xii. 7.
3. To notify by the found of a hammer on a bell.
The Windor bell hath struck twelve. Shakel.
A judicious friend moderates the pursuit, gives the signal for action, presses the advantage, and strikes the critical minute. Collier of Friendship.
4. To stamp; to impress.
The memory in some men is very tenacious; but yet there seems to be a constant decay of all our ideas, even of those which are struck deeply, and in minds the most retentive. Locke.
5. To punish; to afflict.
To punish the just is not good, nor to strike princes for equity. Prov. xvii. 26.
6. To contract; to lower; to vane. It is only used in the phrases to strike sail, or to strike a flag.
How many nobles then would hold their places,
That must strike sail to spirits of vile fort! Shakel. H. IV.
To this all differing passions and interests should strike sail, and like swelling streams, running different courses, should yet all make haste into the sea of common safety. Temple.
They strike sail where they know they shall be mastered, and murder where they can with safety. Dryden.
Now, did I not so near my labours end,
Strike sail, and hasting to the harbour tend,
My song to flow'ry gardens might extend. Dryden.
7. To alarm; to put into emotion.
The rest, struck with horror flood,
To see their leader cover'd o'er with blood. Waller.
Jack Straw at London-stone, with all his rout,
Struck not the city with so loud a shout. Dryden.
His virtues render our assembly awful,
They strike with something like religious fear. Addis. Cato.
Didst thou but view him right, shouldst see him black
With murder, treason, sacrilege, and crimes
That strike my soul with horror but to name them. Addison.
We are no sooner presented to any one we never saw before, but we are immediately struck with the idea of a proud, a reserved, an affable or a good natured man. Addison.
Nice works of art strike and surprize us most upon the first view; but the better we are acquainted with them, the less we wonder. Atterbury.
Court virtues bear, like gems, the highest rate,
Born where heav'n's influence scarce can penetrate;
In life's low vale, the foil the virtues like,
They please as beauties, here as wonders strike. Pope.
8. [Frædis strive.] To make a bargain.
Sign but his peace, he vows he'll ne'er again
The sacred names of fops and beaux profane:
Strike up the bargain quickly; for I wear,
As times go now, he offers very fair.
I come to offer peace; to reconcile
Past enmities; to strike perpetual leagues
With Vanoc. A. Phillips's Briton.
9. To produce by a sudden action.
The court paved, strikes up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter. Bacon.
Waving wide her myrtle wand,
She strikes an universal peace through sea and land. Milton.
Take my caduceus!
With this the infernal ghosts I can command,
And strike a terror through the Stygian strand. Dryden.
10. To affect suddenly in any particular manner.
When verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with the forward child understanding; it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room. Shakel.
Strike her young bones,
Ye taking airs, with lamencels. Shakespeare.
He that is stricken blind cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eye-sight lost. Shakespeare.
So ceas'd the rival crew, when Purcell came,
They sung no more, or only sung his fame;
Struck dumb, they all admitt'd. Dryden.
Humility disarms envy, and strikes it dead. Collier.
Then do not strike him dead with a denial,
But hold him up in life. Addison's Cato.